

Origins of the Arepa

The Arepa was born with the history of maize, which has been known since Mesoamerica approximately two thousand years ago. The grain, synonymous with life in American mythology, went from being American mythology, went from being sacralised by the indigenous people to being abhorred by the Spanish Spanish colonisers, who associated it with the barbaric with the barbaric characteristics attributed to the natives.

Some language scholars suggest that the word arepa comes from the indigenous word "erepa". word "erepa", which the Cumanagotos, a tribe of the Caribbean the Caribs - used to name corn, basic ingredient in the preparation of this food. According to another version, the word "arepa" could come from "aripo", a kind of slightly curved plate made of clay. Slightly curved, made of clay, which was used by the indigenous people for the action of the corn flour dough.

To speak of Arepa is to speak of Colombia ... Part of our culture and of our daily table, it is our most autochthonous culinary expression, it is the beneficial daily bread.
